ALEXIS MARGUERITE TEPLIN'S work draws upon a kaleidoscopic and dense pallet of art historical sources ranging from Fragonard and Rococo aesthetics to modern painters of the 20th century European avant-garde in a visually rich practice that explores art history and femininity. From exuberant abstract paintings which are referentially dense in a variety of art historical formats — ovals, roundels, panoramas and conventional square canvases — to works which collapse the distinctions between painting, sculpture and installations and extend to performance, the artist re-appropriates a feminine aesthetic that tests the constructs that create them, developing a body of work that is questioning and visually pleasurable.
